Fairchild, Delivered at the Commencement of Oberlin College, August 22, 1866 The trust which you commit to me, Fathers and Brethren, is one of gravest importance, and if I were obliged to feel that it must fall on me alone or chiefly, I could not accept the responsibility. The Fathers under whose fostering care the work has been carried on these thirty years and more, are still spared to us. The habit of looking up to them for counsel and encouragement, indulged through many years of connection with the College as pupil and teacher, must cling to me still; and while they live and labor here it will be a relief to know that the burden rests first on them. Under such genial shade it has been my privilege and joy thus far to live and work. God grant me the privilege for many years to come. In the others associated with me in the common work I find abundant ground of confidence. The harmony absolutely unbroken in the past will continue in the future. Each will take his part of the burden, and make that easy for all which it would be impossible for one to bear alone. This mutual confidence and cooperation has been hitherto a pillar of strength. We have every promise of its continuance. Those added to our number by recent appointment are men of the same spirit. They have been tried here and elsewhere, and have not been found wanting. The principle and habit of good order, and of earnest life among our students, furnish another source...
